FRUTIGER AERO

An aesthetic from the 2000s representing the glossy tech era, Basically, the futuristic representation of the world created by the minds of the youth from the 2000s.

Frutiger Aero symbolizes the escape from the minimalistic reality of living in a simple white space.

The aesthetic portrays the futuristic world connecting with nature, making youngsters believe in adapting a hydrating life.

It replaces the flat design with icons containing glossy and 3-D effect, plus it features skeuomorphism.

FRUTIGER METRO

Flat Frutiger Aero aesthetic from the mid-2000s to early 2010s.

The Frutiger Metro contains all the 3D Frutiger Aero components in 2-D flat vector-based shapes.

These aesthetics were used in the 2000s to present the funk-pop culture among youngsters.

Elements like Musical instruments and speaker components are used in this aesthetic for the presentation of Frutiger alongside flowers and butterflies.

The most common component is the cereal-bite-looking character named Domo-kun.

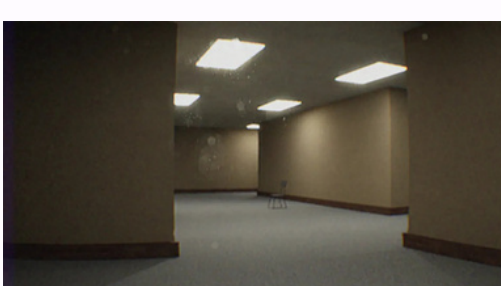

DREAM CORE

An internet art movement emerged during the quarantine era.

The aesthetic is built around the visuals of surreal, liminal spaces and old photos with bright, colourful filters.

These surreal images create an odd vibe as if you're experiencing a dream.

Elements contain single-eyed creatures on mushrooms or centered around flower petals.

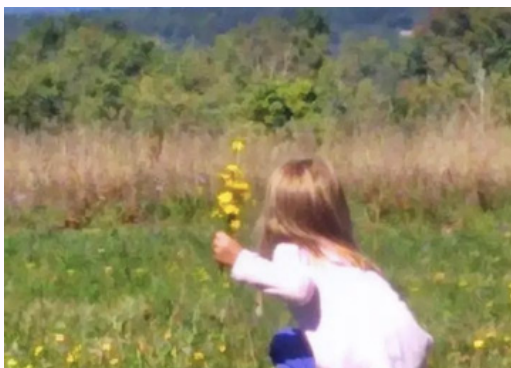

CHILDHOOD CORE

Often called Nostalgia core, it is an internet aesthetic, capturing the pure, innocent moments of that one time in our lives that is hard to come back to.

The childhood core mostly presents the peak era from the 80s to the 2010s, where childhood revolved around funky, colourful toys, video games, cartoons, and mostly memorable moments during school time with your friends.

Common Examples are Disney Channel shows like Hannah Montana or Best of Luck, Nikki(Indian version of Good Luck Charlie), Nickelodeon shows like iCarly, video games like Angry Birds, toys like Barbies and Hotwheels, etc.
